FIVE YEAR BACHELOR OF ARCHITECTURE COURSE

INTRODUCTION

This syllabus is prepared with a view to establish a good overall base for Architecture as a profession. The student is also introduced to other technologies with which he will come in contact during his future career. He specially learns structural engineering which is inseparable from architecture, in such a way that he can design smaller structures on his own and can have intelligent teamwork with the structural engineer, so that there is joint evolution of the final product. He is also given basic knowledge in subjects like interior design, land-scape architecture, urban and rural planning and valuation. This will enable him to develop specialisation in any of these subjects. The syllabus is based on guide-lines as prescribed by the Council of Architecture.

An overall review of the syllabus should be taken every five to ten years, so as to have scope for revision and updating of syllabus in light of experience and to be in tune with the changing values and technology.

The Institution should specially arrange visits to works under construction at different stages and to completed buildings, during which, the students should be trained to observe construction operations with open eyes and have a dialogue with the occupants of the buildings about total reaction to design quality in the completed buildings.

The Institution may under-take a very few selected commissions for designing of architectural buildings and architectural research and involve the senior students and the teaching staff during the design process. Regular supervision and billing of construction shall not be taken. Casual supervision and preparation of sample bills as part of study can be done.

The student, with aid of the teaching staff, is expected to study relevant ISI standards concurrently with the subject.

It must be remembered that this complete course forms a base only and that architecture with all its branches and specialised subjects is a continuing education throughout the Architect's career.

The Institution may take more periods, if they feel so, in the interest of the students. The Institutions may change the number of periods from one subject to the other at its discretion, within the limits laid down by the Council of Architecture, lecture and Studio Periods may also be interchanged.

Several books on relevant subjects have been recommended for reading. It should be noted that the list is not complete in itself nor that all the books are to be studied. The students can browse through these and other books and study relevant portions in detail. Books are also available dealing in details on each type of building. The Institution is recommended to keep such books in its library which the student can refer while solving problems in Architectural Design for particular type of buildings.
